

America's Small Businesses and the Affordable Care Act: Strengthening Health Care for Small Business

A Broken System...

- Health care remains a top concern for small business owners and we know many employers who may want to provide coverage often can't afford to.
- Historically, the health care market has been broken for small businesses. Small businesses faced premium increases for years, often because one worker got sick or their insurance company charged them excessive rates.
- In fact, small business rate hikes averaged 8 percent per year in the decade before the law passed, and they paid on average 18 percent more for the same health benefits as large businesses.

A Better Solution...

- The Affordable Care Act helps small businesses in two critical ways: by increasing access and offering affordable options.
- Since the Affordable Care Act passed, health care costs have been slowing and premium growth has slowed to the lowest rate in years. The law is making it easier for businesses to offer coverage.
- The law holds insurance companies accountable, requiring them to ensure they spend at least 80 percent of each premium on care. Small employers received $200 million in rebates in 2012 alone as a result of this rule.
- Many small employers are also eligible for new tax credits if they offer health coverage, making it easier for small firms to realize the competitive advantages that come with offering coverage. Hundreds of thousands of businesses have already claimed credits of more than $1 billion total.
- And for the first time, small business owners now have the opportunity to leverage their buying power with other small businesses in the Small Business Health Options Program (SHOP) Marketplace.
- SHOP allows small business owners to get comprehensive information about benefits and quality, side-by-side with facts about price—leveling the playing field with their larger competitors by helping them benefit from insurance with lower administrative costs and allowing them to pool risk.
- Thanks in part to reforms in the Affordable Care Act that reduce waste and incentivize more efficient, higher-quality care, health care costs are growing at the slowest rates on record, which will reduce the premiums that businesses pay, making it easier to hire and pay better wages. From 2010 through 2012, health care costs grew at a real per capita annual rate of just 1.1 percent, the slowest rate since we began tracking this data in 1960.
